Communication - to expand the above definition - covers the major- ity of human activities being part of man's activities in the society. It is a universal value representing the basis for the formation and existence of a community. In this context communication will be understood in very general terms as a specific form of contact between subjects participating in the process of shaping and acquiring the knowledge of the world. The pursuit to understand and define the phenomenon of communi- cation is natural. thus forming either meaningful or in many sciences.
